“I could think of another Abraham for myself.” . . . This sentence comes to us from a brief parable, two pages by Kafka . . . “I do not see the leap” he would have to make in order to show himself real to obey God on Mount Moriah—the word leap here confirming what is otherwise well known, namely, that Kafka had read Kierkegaard.

--Jacques Derrida, “Abraham, the Other,” in Judaeities, 1-2

Kafka did not always evade the temptations of a modish mysticism. . . . His ways with his own writing certainly does not exclude this possibility. Kafka had a rare capacity for creating parables of himself. Ye parables are never exhausted by what is explainable; on the contrary, he took all conceivable precautions against the interpretation of his writings. One has to find one’s way in them circumspectly, cautiously, warily. One must keep in mind Kafka’s way of reading, as exemplified in his interpretation of the above mentioned parable [“Beim Bau der Chinesischen Mauer”; “Building the Great Wall of China”]. The text of will is another case in point. Given its background, the directive in which Kafka ordered the destruction of his literary remains is just as unfathomable, to be weighed just as carefully as the answers to the doorkeeper in “Vor dem Gesetz” [“Before the Law”]. Perhaps Kafka, whose every day on earth brought him up against insoluble modes of behavior and imprecise communications, in death wished to his contemporaries a taste of their own medicine.

June 24. Midnight.

Not even what I am writing here is my innermost meaning. I cannot entrust myself to paper in that way even though I see it in what is written. Think of what could happen! The paper could disappear; there could be a fire were I live and I could live in uncertainty; I could die and thus leave it behind me; I could lose my mind and my innermost being would come into alien hands; I could go blind and not be able to find it myself. I do not know whether I stood with it in my hands without asking someone else, not know whether he lied whether he was reading, what was written there or something else in order to sound me out.

"Nur ein Völlig Fremder kann Ihre Frage stellen. Ob es Kontrollbehörden gibt? Es gibt nur Kontrollbehörden Freilich, sie sind nicht dazu bestimmt, Fehler im großen Wortsinn herauszufinden denn Fehler kommen nicht vor, und selbst, wenn einmal ein Fehler vorkommt, wie in Ihrem Fall, wer darf den endgültig sagen, es ein Fehler ist."

"Das wäre etwas Völlig Neues!" rief K.

"Mir ist es etwas sehr Altes," sagte der Vorsteher.

I interrupt my paraphrase here only to point out that I was speaking about issues, concerns, matters of arrested into our field of vision and only now, by means of imperiled speech, did they emerge as shadows at intervals. I observe that we had no way of verifying what he means of his own annotated presentations at the time they were not understood, even while their tender minds were enriched and stimulated in some strangely dreamlike reverie. “Fugue,” “counterpoint,” “Eroica,” “confusion resolutely colored modulations,” “strict style”—all the fairy-tale whispers for us, but we heard them as glimmerings as children listen to something incomprehensible, inappropriate for them—and with much more delight than what lies close at hand, from what is fitting and proper, from the most intensive and proud, perhaps the official kind of learning—anticipatory learning, learning by stretching of ignorance? As a pedagogue I should prefer to do it its behalf, but I know for a fact that young people have a preference for it, and I suspect that with time the skipped fills up all on its own.

Pausing to leave a text in order to find out more about what is being discussed and described; going a source like wikipedia to find out a little bit about or going to youtube to listen to a piece of music; returning to the text where you left. The text returns to you; you may reread it; you may finally read it after all; you may learn even more. Reading is a vice which can replace all other vices or temporarily take their place in more intensely helping people live, it is an aberration a consuming passion. No, I don’t take any drugs, I take books, of course I have certain preferences, many books don’t suit me at all, some I take only in the morning, others at night, there are books I don’t ever let go, I drag them around with me in the apartment, carrying them from the living room into the kitchen, I read them in the hall standing up, I don’t use a bookmark, I don’t move my lips while reading, early on I learned to read very well, I don’t remember the method, but you ought to look into it. They must have used an excellent method in our provincial elementary schools, at least back when I learned to read.

Gladstone said, “To me, the biggest amazement when I looked at everything was that for someone as iconoclastic as that, who didn’t care for the system, he saved every scrap. He cared about posterity, or else throw it away! Every little napkin—"
She gestured toward some twenty boxes that had been assembled for the perusal of Marvin J. Taylor, the director of the Fales Library, at N.Y.U., and the founder of the library’s Downtown Collection, which would be receiving Smith’s ephemera.

"Historical, in fact philological, considerations have slowly but surely taken the place of profound explorations of eternal problems. The question becomes: What did this or that philosopher think or not think? And is this or that text rightly ascribed to him or not? And even: Is this variant of a classical text preferable to that other?
Students in university seminars today are encouraged to occupy themselves with such emasculated inquiries. As a result, of course, philosophy itself is banished from the university altogether."

During the war and postwar years, I lost sight of foreign literary criticism after it vanished and was thus inaccessible to me. Also, as a consequence of an air raid in 1944, parts of the Bonn University Library were unusable or burnt. I could no longer check various citations or consult many sources. But if literature is "the
